

CASC E-mail Application

Electronic communication is provided for academic programs and college operations. Incidental personal use is tolerated; however, for extensive or recurring communication not related to college purposes, you should use non-college resources.

Use caution when utilizing e-mail. The Internet is not a secure environment. As pointed out by other universities, "The privacy of electronic mail is somewhere between that of a letter and a postcard." CASC also reserves the right to copy and examine any files or information resident on CASC systems, including the OneNet hub equipment. It is not the intention of CASC to actively monitor electronic communication; however, all forms of electronic communication are subject to the CASC code of computer conduct.

I agree to the terms of this application.
